Cleveland CPC Full Commission Business Meeting & Public Comment “Ground Rules”

The CPC holds its Full Commission business meetings in public, so the community can observe the proceedings of the CPC and witness the work and deliberations of its Commissioners. (See the CPC brochure and website for other types of open, public meetings the CPC also holds.)

As part of its Full Commission meetings, the CPC has also established a formal and regular public comment period, which typically comes at the end of the meeting.

This is the part of the meeting when the public can ask questions or offer comments, and the Commissioners become primarily listeners, hearing your viewpoints, ideas, and concerns.

Holding open Full Commission meetings and building in a regular public comment period have been two important ways for the CCPC to promote transparency and begin to build trust and community.

Creating spaces where people can be honest, feel safe, as well as see the value – and necessity – in ongoing and consistent community input and dialogue IS NOT EASY. By following these Ground Rules, it is the CPC’s hope that it can simultaneously work to create meaningful opportunities for candid community input, build confidence, air difficult issues, and think about pathways for impactful police reform.

PUBLIC COMMENT -- GROUND RULES:

- 1. Up to 30-minute time period overall, with 2 minutes allotted to each speaker.
- 2. Be succinct as possible to be respectful of others who want to speak.
- 3. Focus your comments on ideas and not people.
- 4. Avoid invectives and name-calling.
- 5. Speak only once. If everyone who wants to speak has had that chance, then people who have already spoken may have another opportunity to speak, at the discretion of the facilitator.
- 6. Abide by “STEP UP, STEP BACK.” That is, SHARE the floor. If you speak all the time, give others a chance to speak. If you don’t often speak, PLEASE DO. We want to hear from you.

MESSAGE FROM THE COMMISSIONERS

We want to hear your questions, concerns and suggestions about how the Cleveland Community Police Commission can develop policies and procedures that will achieve comprehensive law enforcement reform and build better community-police relations based on trust and legitimacy. We strive to advance the highest standards of 21st century policing through policy reforms affecting bias-free and constitutional policing, use of force policies, fairness, transparency, accountability, and the development of a culture and practice of policing that promotes the protection and dignity of all people, especially the most vulnerable.

Please share any questions, comments, and suggestions below.
